The true doctrine is, it is the duty of every man to relieve human misery and suffering, so far as in him lies. From this we can never be exonerated. Behold this brethren, fellow-citizens, here is our duty, the greatest, most crnne, manifest, and terrible, evils that ever afflicted mankind. Say, shall we fold our hands, seal our lips, and stop and dream our lives away, and do nothing to relieve this suffering and wretched race? Shall we, to remove it? no, not so much as to speak against it, or cast a vote against it? Shall we suffer this tide of iniquity, tyranny and ruin to roll on, as it

Take another sample. One of the most influential citizens of Baltimore, is a well known military man, Col. S—. By a subsequent marriage, he has a family of six children, subsequently had children by each of the daughters. Not long since, he sold the mother, daughters and grandchildren, all to the slave trader, Hope H. Slater, for $100,000. This is a well known fact, and shocked at the enormity of such disclosures? Let him remember that this forms a part, even, of the every day life of our country. I say, it is a part of the life of our country. The horrible corruption of thought and feeling, the cheapening of human virtue, the contempt of human affections and sufferings, the degradation of human nature, are everywhere evinced, in their daily trampling on their wishes, feelings and enjoyments. These indicate a corruption far more deep and deadly than the outward immoralities of the slave trade. Correspondent of the Albany Patriot.

From the Bangor Gazette.

... Mr. Clay himself was aware that he was introducing a change in the protective policy of our Government; a change which we at least, deem radical. In his remarks on bringing in the Bill, he said—'by what circumstances, and through what causes, has arisen the necessity for this change in the policy of our country. I will not pretend now to elucidate.' In this extract there is a full admission of a change in our policy of protection. Mr. Webster, and other distinguished Tariff-men so regarded it at the time, and ever since have so regarded it. As late as

Only four of these Resolutions have reference to the subject under examination. The substance of the first Resolution is that Government ought 'to provide an adequate revenue within the year, to meet the current expenses of the year.' That Mr. Clay may have the full benefit of his own mode of stating his own principles, I quote the last three. These Resolutions

Colonel Johnson declares for the annexation of Texas in a letter to a Pittsburg committee, 'when it shall be in accordance with the sentiments and wishes of a majority of the people of the United States, and the people of that territory consenting.'

It is always right that the greatest sufferers should be attended to; that the greatest evils should be first removed. In the long catalogue of aristocratic oppressions and insolences, which so abound in this country, the blackest and the worst, so long as slavery is permitted to exist, is the height of absurdity and folly to talk about this country being Democratic and free. The European despots and their minions put at three millions of slaves, and laugh at us; as if we excused Dr. Dewey for saying that any body else could lay off upon a New York audience, or a Boston public, it will be impossible for any right-minded American to hold up his head before the tribunal of the world, and to justify or apologize for slavery, without at the same time admit-
